A collection of old sketches

by Jade Everstone

Instagram was never really a platform I liked using. To the point even when I did use it as a main page I only used it for sketches. It was easier to post photos directly through my phone than to go through extra steps to retrofit my larger works for there.

When I initially stopped using the site for art in 2020, I archived most of them. But instead of unarchiving them on that site (as I no longer use it for art as of making this zine), I've decided to compile some highlights here. While there were some that made their way onto my other socials at the time, most of them were only ever posted to Instagram. And I think it's time they get to feature somewhere outside of the Zuckerberg hellsite.

These images span 2016-2021 and are not representative of my current self & works, with most of them being presented without context.

Even if they are doodles I did in highschool, I still think it's an interesting look into how I used to draw back then.

My first Instagram was made around the time I was first active in LPStube. So there was some overlap between my LPS stuff & art stuff... and some personal posts...

There wasn't really a direction for this page yet. An experimental era if you will

WASTING MY TIME

Around this year I started using ballpoint pens and highlighters heavily in my sketchbooks. I still like the overal look of them, very vibrant. I've since graduated to fountain pens for sketching (easier on the hands). But I'll admit, the sketchy ballpoint pen look is very nostalgic to me.

This my most active year on Instagram, and when I used my sketchbook the most. I feel like this is when they were the most polished. My modern sketchbooks are more glorified notepads. And as much as I miss doing colorful spreads like I did back then, I think it's for the best it stays that way.

The last year I was truely active on Instagram. At this time, I started using other sites more. And due to AP studio art & starting college, I was spending more time outside of my sketchbooks.

I like to imagine these pics as a send-off to this era of my art.

2020-2021 I started using Instagram far less for art, and more so as a personal spam page. Very few drawings were posted then. These were the last few from the data backup.

Bonus corruptions. Instagram used to spit these out on my phone occasionally. I think it was a bug with multi-post images at the time? But it was cool to get these, since I was super into the glitch-aesthetics back then.

Another bonus. For a while I used to edit some of my art specifically for Instagram. They were never crossposted, since it was just basic background & cropping edits.

Would've been redundant to mirror these offsite, especially since they were made to negate Instagram-specific issues.
